

In order to reduce the risk of resistance to certain antibiotics of critical importance in human medicine - Quinolones, 3rd and 4th generation Cephalosporins and Macrolides – their use is not desired in animals destined for our supply chains. Producers supplying St Merryn or McIntosh Donald must be committed to reducing their use and are required to confirm on the relevant beef or lamb delivery note if, to the best of their knowledge, any of the products listed below have been administered to the animals in that consignment. The information required relates to the product and the number of treatments (defined by a ‘course’ according to the data sheet) of antibiotics per individual animal. Listed below are the products that this pertains to.

Producer recording requirements:

- The farm medicine book and other relevant farm records must be kept up to date.
- Any treatments containing these products which are given or known about must be notified via the Food Chain information presented with the batch of animals to the processor.
